HEAVIEST RAIN IN 25 YEARS

AN Records for High Waters Broken in Long Condemned and Heavy Rain Damage Reported throughout the County.

High water records of the past quarter of a century, made on Sunday, were still further demolished on Thursday when Rock Creek, Marsh Creek and the Conowingo and all the numerous smaller streams were swollen by the rain of the night and morning to depths far beyond the normal and even in season of the former record attained at the time of the Johnstown flood in 1869.

The stream in the country, high for some days, now rapidly with the heavy rainfall of the night and so this morning the increasing flows reached their high water mark and towns and cities and villages were swelled by the waters of the night and morning to depths far beyond the normal and even in season of the former record attained at the time of the Johnstown flood in 1869.

The larger country bridges were in many places endangered. An automobile starting from Gettysburg on its way to Chambersburg turned back when Marsh Creek was reached and took a route by Chambersburg. Other bridges presented such a dangerous appearance that it was not deemed prudent to allow people who ventured out turned back rather than the risk of being swept away into the water.

At the bridge over Willow Run, the first of the Gettysburg Water Company's bridges, the water was so high that it was practically impossible to reach the top of a buggy box and it was practically impossible to get across. The water was so high that it was practically impossible to reach the top of a buggy box and it was practically impossible to get across.
